What do Babe Ruth, Michael Jordan, Tiger Woods and Hunter Norman, of Bristol Township, have in common?

They've all appeared on a box of Wheaties.

The 15-year-old with Asperger's syndrome was recently featured on the breakfast of champions' box along with a handful of other Special Olympics athletes who will compete in this year's national games in New Jersey next month. The commemorative, limited edition cereal box will appear on ShopRite grocery store shelves throughout the Northeast.

"It's really a neat thing," said Sean Norman, Hunter's father. "My mom went out and bought about 15 boxes to send out to family members."

The Norman family, from the Goldenridge section of Levittown, was caught off guard after being contacted by General Mills representatives last month, Norman said.

"It was pretty cool. We got a phone call saying that our son's photo kept coming to the top of the pile," he said.

Despite living with Asperger's, Hunter has played baseball for Levittown International and Levittown Continental baseball teams since the age of 5. When not on the baseball diamond, Hunter attends class at the Y.A.L.E. School in Cherry Hill, New Jersey, which teaches students with social and learning disabilities.

"Baseball is Hunter's life," said his mother, Debbie Norman. "He will watch as many games as he possibly can and imitates everything the pros do so he can become a better player."

Sportsmanship, teamwork and athleticism are what got Hunter to where he is today, Sean Norman said.

To make the year even better, the Special Olympics added baseball to the games for the first time this year.

"Hunter, and the rest of our team, have made amazing progress since we began practicing together a year ago," said Tony Vlahovic, Hunter's coach. "We started by teaching how to wear a glove properly and use correct throwing mechanics, but today, I'm watching players hit ground balls in the gaps and turn double plays with lightning speed."

Hunter, who pitches and plays shortstop, will be among nearly 3,500 athletes competing during the weeklong event 2014 Special Olympics USA National Games in 16 team and individual sports, with the support of 1,000 coaches, 10,000 volunteers and 70,000 family, friends and spectators, according to www.2014specialolympics.org.

Opening ceremonies will be June 14 at the Prudential Center in Newark, New Jersey. Competitions will take place at Princeton University, Rider University, The College of New Jersey and Mercer County Park.
